Storyboarding A Youtube Funny Web Series

There are several actresses, writers, directors, and actors that are consistently making money creating hilarious shows online. Lots of different creative types can make their own shows that make people burst into laughter. Sometimes it's difficult to come up with ideas for different episodes. Once you learn how to storyboard a YouTube funny webisode the process becomes a lot more manageable.

You'll have to start by choosing the kind of frame work your show will have. For instance, creating a show that revolves around throwing up on roller coasters will require a different amount of planning than something that could be filmed in your living room. Make sure you let the cast and crew know what's going on so that they can properly prepare for the show.

You will have to create a cast of characters for each video. Depending on the number of characters you have in each episode, you will need to hire a set number of actors. Try not to use the same actor for multiple roles or else you may confuse your audience.

Start out by writing what the basic premise of the show is going to be. For instance, your character could wake up and realize that all his furniture has gone missing. This basic premise could lead into all sorts of hilarious situations, depending on how creative you want to be. You could have clowns or aliens come in out of nowhere and start bopping your main character in the face with balloons.

The ending of your video will be entirely up to the actors and the writers. In comedy, typically the characters will fail to get what they set out to get in the beginning. Be sure to keep that in mind as you write out your script.

Once you understand how to storyboard a YouTube funny webisode, the rest of the process is easy. Get some skilled actors and good cameramen and go and make your show. Have a great time!
